The Students For Fair Admissions (“SFFA”) v. Harvard and UNC
The Pending SCOTUS Decisions

Words Matter

Affirmative Action involves decisions that give preference based on racial status/identity, including policies that establish quotas or allocate points explicitly related to race for all applicants from a specific group. Quotas prohibited since Bakke (1978).

Race-Conscious Admission includes race as a stand-alone factor among many other factors used for consideration in the admission process. (Gratz/Grutter, Fisher)

Individualized holistic review of students’ applications in the higher education admission process is a process in which all relevant factors, considered in combination, shape applicant-specific judgments about their ability to succeed, and their ability contribute to, and benefit from, their learning environment, peers, and community; SFFA maintains that “racial categorization” or “stereotyping” will continue.
In October 2022, SCOTUS heard arguments in the SFFA v Harvard/UNC cases. A decision could come anytime before Summer 2023.

SFFA claims that the schools discriminate against Asian American applicants (Harvard) and both White and Asian American applicants (UNC), and therefore in violation of federal law.

A long and winding road...

Peeling back the layers of the onion…

70% of Asian/Asian Americans support affirmative action (Source: AAPI Data, APIA Vote, and Asian Americans Advancing Justice-AAJC).

SFFA was founded by Edward Blum, a conservative strategist with a goal to end racial classifications in education, voting, redistricting and employment. Many feel he did not do this for the Asian/Asian American community.

Affirmative action does NOT mean that “less qualified” students are admitted over “more qualified” students.

Using race as a factor in the admissions process does NOT mean quotas.
How might the SCOTUS decide? Again, words matter.

Potential outcomes: The Court could hold that...

1. The schools’ programs were consistent with Grutter, uphold Grutter, allowing race-conscious policies to continue to the extent currently permitted.

2. Either or both schools’ programs are inconsistent with Grutter, but uphold Grutter, allowing race-conscious policies to continue to the extent currently permitted.

3. Grutter should be overruled and conclude that race-conscious admission policies are unconstitutional and violate Title VI.

4. Grutter was correct and race-conscious policies are constitutional, but they have proven to be unworkable, or are no longer necessary to achieve diversity.

5. Student body diversity is no longer a compelling state interest; therefore, race-conscious admissions policies can no longer be justified.
Given the current makeup of the SCOTUS and comments/questions posed to date by the justices during oral arguments, the first and second outcomes are unlikely.

Thus, schools need to consider what potential changes will be required to their admission practices in the event the Court rules that consideration of race must end, either immediately or by a specific date in the future.
What’s next?

UMD needs to inventory its current practices and policies; document all changes; and adopt race-neutral alternatives while avoiding vulnerability to claims that a race-neutral factor is being used as a ‘proxy’ for race.

Many states (CA, AZ, FL, MI) already prohibit the use of race in college admissions. They may have developed some effective race-neutral alternatives.
What do we know for sure?

The benefits of racial diversity are significant and measurable harm results from its absence.

The lack of diversity has implications for the medical, corporate, and military fields as well as the economy.

Holistic review involves consideration of the individual – not a judgment based on labels, assumptions or stereotypes; or based solely on “objective data.”

Full examination of an applicant often requires examination of race-related experiences, perspectives and interests.

We have a lot of work ahead of us.

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

STUDENTS FOR FAIR ADMISSIONS, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

PRESIDENT & FELLOWS OF HARVARD COLLEGE,

Respondent.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

BRIEF OF 1,241 SOCIAL SCIENTISTS
AND SCHOLARS ON COLLEGE ACCESS,
ASIAN AMERICAN STUDIES, AND RACE AS
AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF RESPONDENT
LEGAL PARAMETERS, TODAY
AFFIRMATIVE ACTION IS...

● Not a quota (Bakke, 1978)
● Not a point system with bonus or preference based simply on demographic identity (Gratz, 2003)
LEGAL PARAMETERS – AFFIRMATIVE ACTION TODAY

- Race can be holistically considered as “a factor within a factor” to allow colleges/universities to meet their educational mission (Bakke, Grutter, Fisher II)

- Race can be considered in admissions, but never as the primary and never as the only factor

- That mission is to create a diverse learning environment for all students

- Constitutional justification for use of race is diversity, NOT remedy for racial discrimination
LOTS OF TALK ABOUT "HOLISTIC ADMISSIONS"

• In holistic admissions, many factors considered, race can never be the primary or only factor.
• Let’s see how it works…Workshop Time!
Applied Practice

Group Table Exercise

How do Holistic Admissions work?
What does race have to do with it?
CURRENT LAWSUIT RELIES ON HIGHLY CIRCULATED, BUT FALSE “ASIAN PENALTY” NARRATIVE

- Plaintiff (the group suing to end affirmative action) asserts
- Asian Americans must score higher than other groups on standardized tests to be admitted to highly selective institutions
- Asian Americans face bias because on one of five ratings, as a group they scored lower than other groups (“personal rating”)
- There is a cap on Asian American admissions
- Their proposed remedy – eliminate ANY use of race or any racial identification in college admissions
WHO IS BRINGING THIS LAWSUIT
SFFA VS. HARVARD (2015)
[ALSO UNC]

Complaint by SFFA alleges Harvard engages in intentional discrimination against Asian Americans

Ruling in federal court on Oct 1, 2019; Appeal heard Sept 2020; Supreme Court heard this case on Oct 31, 2022; Supreme Court will issue ruling June 2023
WHO IS SFFA? EDWARD BLUM

Successful in challenging major provisions Voting Rights Act of 1965 (Shelby v. Holder 2013)

Was not successful, but brought Supreme Court case against counting immigrants as part of state populations for purposes of drawing voter districts (Evenwel vs. Abbott 2015)
RULING IN FEDERAL COURT: AGAINST PLAINTIFF’S CLAIMS ON ALL 4 COUNTS

Harvard Does Not Discriminate Against Asian-Americans in Admissions, Judge Rules

Harvard was accused of discriminating against Asian-American applicants in a case that set off a national discussion about the role of race and ethnicity in college admissions.

By Anemona Hartocollis
Oct. 1, 2016
Harvard gives Asian-Americans lower personality ratings than other races, lawsuit claims

Media misread – the Harvard “personal rating” is not a “personality test” based on charm or charisma
BUT, COURTS FOUND NO DISCRIMINATION IN ADMISSIONS!

- Harvard’s expert did further analysis of the data – Asian Americans from California of both genders, and Asian American women overall advantaged by personal rating, all other factors held constant.
- Asian Americans have unexplained racial advantage on Harvard’s “academic score” – beyond tests and grades.
- Black, Latino, and Native Americans ALSO face implicit bias, but bias can advantage Asian Americans in ways that it doesn’t for other racial minorities.
- Asian American legacies slightly outperform White legacies with similar characteristics in admission (!)
PERSONAL SCORE IN HARVARD CASE

- What is it? NOT a “personality rating” but instead reflects applicant essays, teacher and counselor recommendations, alumni and staff interviews, anticipated career, parental occupation
- Asian Ams only very slightly weaker personal ratings — only 0.05 points difference between Asian American and White applicants on average.
- Other groups have to score higher on personal rating or other factors if standardized test scores lower on average
- Asian Americans admitted at higher rate than Whites if include legacies, early admits, Dean’s list (which SFFA expert did NOT include in analysis)
5. SFFA has misleadingly promoted the idea that the application files are filled with stereotypical comments by admissions officers, but flagged only six comments regarding Asian American applicants, including “very quiet” and “quiet and strong.” But, “very quiet” and “quiet and strong” are comments that appear in notes about White, Latinx and African American applicants, too. There is no evidence that the comments result from racial bias, were untrue, or were even negative. Harvard’s admissions guidelines are clear about valuing a range of personal qualities. The 2013–14 Interviewer Handbook, which is in the evidence, reminds alumni to appreciate “introspection” and “the reflective introvert as well as . . . the future leader.”
CHECKING THE “ASIAN BOX”

- “Applying to College, and Trying to Appear ‘Less Asian’”
  (December 2, 2022) The myth of an “Asian American” penalty is at the heart of recent challenges to affirmative action and its power is evident in the widely circulated but unproven notion that Asian American applicants must hide their race to get into a highly-selective college.

- Clearly holistic admissions work very well for Asian Americans, who constitute less than 10% of the population but more than 25% of Harvard’s incoming class. We only know this statistic because that group of admitted Asian American students checked the “Asian” box - before they got into Harvard.

- The false claim that Asian Americans face a racial penalty in the admissions process is a highly effective scare tactic used by private college admissions counselors like those featured in the story to drum up business.
HARVARD CASE BOTTOM LINES AND GOING FORWARD

- This case is not about Harvard alone, but about use of race in public policy more generally – broad implications
- Personal score differences are negligible, no evidence more Asian Americans would have gotten in without it, no evidence any student got into Harvard as result of personal score or race alone
- Empirical studies show race neutral alternatives (based on income) not as effective at fostering diverse study body (Julie J. Park 2018, 68).
COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ARE WAITING FOR SUPREME COURT DECISION

A lot of uncertainty, including whether the Supreme Court will overturn 40 years of precedent that has determined affirmative action to be constitutional.
“WHAT’S NEXT”?

- This is the wrong question
- “What can we do, RIGHT NOW?”
WE DON’T NEED TO WAIT FOR THE DECISION TO ADOPT POLICIES THAT CREATE MORE ACCESS

- Eliminate standardized tests in admissions (see Cashin’s roundup of increased diversity of applicants after institutions chose to eliminate standardized testing requirements; The UC system eliminated the SAT in admissions based in part on Saul Geiser’s research)
- Offer more financial aid, especially to first-generation students
- Offer more pre-college programs
- Deepen and expand funding for college-readiness and support programs
- Foster a sense of belonging through cohorts of students and shared-identity peer groups
- Provide access to human capital and high-quality mentorships from faculty of color
- Offer more ethnic studies courses
